HALLOWE'EN AT G. C. O.

They say that October 31st is the time when witches are out, and the goblins'll get ye if ye don't watch out; but next Thursday, the 19th is Hallowe'en at the Gray Court-Owings school building, and the following invitations are already out to all the grown folk in and around Gray Court and Owings:

"We have a hired ghost

To be your host

At G. C. O. on Hallowe'en;

Where tables will rock,

And knees will knock

And spirits will sure be seen—

At 7:30, October 19, 1922.

School Improvement Association."

Great preparations are being made for the entertainment of all, and if the Mamas just can't leave the little ones, be sure to send the Papas. One main feature of the evening will be "ye old-time schule". Hallowe'en stunts will be engaged in, and there will be fun for all.

Tho' the Jack-o-Lanterns here and there at you grin,

And tho' the flitting shadows dim a bit your sight,

Don't think you're getting in the witches den,

But be, yourself, a child again just for the night.

Be ready for to eat, for eats there will be,

And don't forget as you come, it is free—all free.

Notwithstanding the unfavorable weather on Saturday last the "markets" were open at both Gray Court and Owings, and about $30.00 was realized. The hot stewed oysters served by the Owings ladies were "right in season". Don't forget the markets again on Saturday October 21.

"CAPPY RICKS."

Peter B. Kyne, who wrote "Cappy Ricks," spent his spare time several years ago along the San Francisco water front, acquainting himself with the rare types of humanity peculiar to that locality. There he met an old sea captain with a keen sense of humor, who always insisted on having his own way, right or wrong. Around this weather-beaten old sea-dog Mr. Kyne wrote the "Cappy Ricks" stories which found favor with millions of readers of the Saturday Evening Post.

"Cappy Ricks" was dramatized and presented on Broadway with Tom Wise and William Courtenay in the leading roles. It is one of the cleanest plays on the American stage, and has had a most successful run.

The play deals with high finance on the high seas. It is characterized by wholesome atmosphere and keen character types, carrying a delightful love story and a fund of pathos. In it there is not a dull moment.

"Cappy Ricks" will be presented here by a New York cast organized and coached by William J. Keighley, manager of the Redpath Bureau's New York City producing department.
